

How to Make Conflict Work for You

with Elisabet Rodriguez Dennehy

of the Executive Leadership Program, Katz Graduate School of Business, University of Pittsburgh

28th November, 2012, 9 – 11am
Katz School of Business – Prague campus
Truhlarska 15, Prague 1

Conflict is difficult to manage. It can be a roadblock to collaboration and to a healthy work environment. This module helps participants to understand conflict, how to prevent its escalation and, ultimately, how to use conflict as a positive force for change — one that fosters leadership and engagement.

This interactive workshop will:

- Explain fundamental principles and techniques of conflict resolution
- Engage you in interactive communication, offering solutions for your real-life challenges
- Provide space for Q&As

Registration:

Capacity is limited. Please reserve your seat using the following sign-up form: REGISTRATION
If you cannot access the form, please contact Alice Kralova at akralova@katz.pitt.edu

Elisabet Rodriguez Dennehy teaches in the Executive Leadership Program delivered by the Katz Graduate School of Business of the University of Pittsburgh in Prague and Sao Paulo. She is the founder and president of Rodriguez & Associates, a strategic consulting firm based in Pittsburgh that specializes in women's advancement in organizations. She has 12 years of experience in international business development in Latin America and Europe.

Actively involved in executive leadership programs for multinational companies such as GlaxoSmithKline, UPMC, MSA, or Kennametal, and in the Czech Republic cooperating with UniCredit and Microsoft, Elisabet teaches subjects such as leadership, business ethics, global issues in organizations, professional development, and diversity in the workforce.

Elisabet serves and served in the past in board of various institutions and received several Women in Business awards. She has recently released a book Can You Afford to Ignore Me? How to Manage Women from Different Ethnic Backgrounds.